The Wm. Reece Smith, Jr. Leadership Academy is a multi-session training program designed to help a diverse and inclusive group of lawyers become better leaders. Each year a select group of participants are selected from applications submitted to The Florida Bar to become Academy Fellows.

During their one-year term, Academy Fellows follow a curriculum tailored to enhance their professional development, knowledge base and experience, including attending The Florida Bar events and special educational programs. Academy Fellows are given the opportunity to learn more about the inner workings of the Bar and their role in the legal profession, while enhancing their personal leadership skills.
Setting the gold standard for professionalism and a shining example of pro bono service, Wm. Reece Smith, Jr., died at his Tampa home on January 11, 2013, after a brief illness.

At 87 years old, Smith was the last surviving named shareholder at Carlton, Fields, Ward, Emmanuel, Smith & Cutler, the Tampa firm he joined in 1953.

When family, friends, and colleagues gathered on January 17, 2013 at Hyde Park United Methodist Church to pay their respects, the program contained this description of Smith’s philosophy of lawyering, based on three moral edicts:

• Every person deserves to have their basic rights protected, regardless of economic or social circumstances.
• Lawyers are privileged professionals and as such have a responsibility to use their skills and knowledge for the betterment of all members of society.
• In rendering legal services, lawyers must possess the virtues of good character, competence, and commitment to clients, the courts, and the public interest. Smith called them “The Three C’s. For almost 60 years, he practiced what he preached — and that is Smith’s legacy.

Pro Bono

Pro bono literally means “for the public good.” The idea of pro bono services is to provide all people legal assistance, despite their financial situations. For attorneys, it provides a way for them to use their professional talents in a way that helps under-served populations in their community and narrows the access to justice gap.

Pro bono work can be incredibly rewarding, but it’s not typically financially profitable. Not every attorney can afford to donate the time and resources necessary to fulfill pro bono obligations. However, there is a way to take pro bono cases without losing money.

“Service is the rent we pay for the privilege of living on this earth.”

- Shirley Chisholm
2022 Recipient of the Tobias Smith Pro Bono Award

Raymond F. Brady
Law School Attended: University of Florida
Years of Practice: 37
Current Firm: Law Office of Raymond F. Brady, P.L
Law Firm Details: RayBradyLaw.com ~ 352.554.5328

Why is pro-bono important:
"Because we, as officers of the court, have sworn to assist those who lack the resources to obtain justice and access to the judicial system, without us. Plus, we are so privileged to hold Bar licenses and practice law, that we should feel indebted and compelled to give back to our communities."

Which opportunites command most of your attention:
"I focus on handling individual pro bono cases, and I help run the 8th Circuit’s "Ask A Lawyer" pro bono program, and I help run the Alachua County Drivers License Reinstatement Clinic, amongst other pro bono projects."

How do you manage balance between work/life/pro-bono:
"Since we, as lawyers, tend to "burn the candle at both ends", there is generally no denying that taking the time to render pro bono service cuts into somewhat the time you have for your law practice. If you are lucky, as I have been as a small firm practitioner, you can manage your practice so as to do both, and still have some time for yourself."

Words of wisdom for other attorneys:
"Providing free legal services directly to pro bono clients is the most rewarding thing you will do as a lawyer. You likely will have no other clients who appreciate and value you so much. When you’re helping people to obtain income, or housing, or medical care, or public benefits, the legal services you are providing typically leave you feeling like you’re providing life-saving measures. What could possibly be more rewarding?"
The Florida Bar Young Lawyers Division Pro Bono Service Award

Tremaine L. Hemans

Law School Attended: Florida International University
Years of Practice: 2.5
Current Firm: The Hemans Law Group

When Tremaine L. Hemans walked into her first class at Florida International College of Law, she was one of only three Black students in her section of more than 70 students and initially “wrongly decided” she did not belong there.

Not wanting anyone else to ever feel like she did that day, the experience launched Hemans’ journey into pro bono work, mentorship, and immigration law.

Now just three years into her legal career, Hemans is the recipient of the 2022 Florida Bar Young Lawyers Division Pro Bono Service Award.

Hemans, managing attorney and CEO of the Hemans Law Group, P.A., based in Miami and Ft. Lauderdale, has provided pro bono work on Violence Against Women Act cases, helping victims of domestic violence obtain permanent residency without their abusive spouse or parent. Hemans is currently working on a pro bono political asylum case in immigration court.

Hemans said LegalTrem is the most important thing that she has done in her short legal career and hopes that it inspires others “to be good stewards of the gifts we have been given and to reach back to others and treat the mentorship of young lawyers and pro bono services as an act of service that we owe to the public and the field itself.”

2022 Florida Pro Bono Law School Challenge Winners

The 2022 Challenge ran January 31 – March 25, 2022.

Since 2019, Florida's law schools have competed each spring semester to see which can take the most pro bono cases.

A core part of the Foundation’s mission is to promote public service among lawyers by making it an integral part of the law school experience.

By connecting students with lawyers to partner on pro bono cases from legal aid organizations, the Foundation increases access to justice and promotes pro bono work.

Pro Bono Tips for Young Lawyers

- Pick a cause, organization, or work that you feel passionately about or at least have some affinity towards. Everyone is busy, and it can be difficult to make time for pro bono work. Caring strongly about what you’re doing will help on those days when you need to stay late to handle your billable and pro bono work competently.

- Don’t be scared to try something different. It may be difficult to find pro bono work in your particular practice area; this shouldn’t prevent you from taking on a pro bono matter. There are resources out there that can help. Non-profit legal aid services often put on clinics teaching how to handle common legal issues that lower income people face. Similarly, staff attorneys at legal aid providers can be extremely helpful. I have reached out on multiple occasions to such attorneys, and they have always been willing to lend me their ear and point me in the right direction.

- Make sure you have the appropriate time and resources available to you prior to taking on a pro bono matter. You owe the same ethical obligations to a pro bono client as you owe a large institutional client. In my experience, the best time to take on a pro bono matter is right after settling a big case when there is a lull in my hours.

- Set your client’s expectations and scope of work clearly, early on, and in writing. I once made the mistake of taking a non-emergency, late phone call from a pro bono client. From that day on, the client continued to call me at all hours of the day (and night).

- Ask your colleagues for help. If you work at a firm like mine, your colleagues will have the same pro bono requirements. Pro bono work is a good opportunity to split work with colleagues so nobody is overwhelmed.

Why is pro-bono important:
"It provides services to the community that are otherwise not available because of the high cost of legal services. Those who are most in need of legal assistance generally cannot afford it and do not even know where to seek help. Pro bono work also enhances the reputation of the Bar and participating attorneys. It is also very rewarding."

Which opportunities command most of your attention:
"Bay Area Legal Services and Crossroads for Florida Kinds"

How do you manage balance between work/life/pro-bono:
"I live by my calendar and to-do lists in my case management system. I prioritize and make sure I take time for things that are important to me in my personal life: church, family, friends and social activities. It is still difficult to maintain that balance at times because the unexpected seems to happen with some regularity but being organized helps when dealing with the crises that occur in life."

Words of wisdom for other attorneys:

Can lawyers have work-life balance?
Optimistically, yes! Although realistically, this looks different for lawyers than it does for individuals in other professions. This is because the demands of your day as a lawyer will vary based on practice area, law firm culture, the structure of your family, and the kind of support you have both personally and professionally.

Since lawyer work-life balance is closely related to mental health and well-being, the key to achieving work-life balance lies solely with you. No one else can tell you what you need to nourish your mind, body and spirit, so coming up with your own definition is the only way to achieve that balance.

Work-life balance is a process, not a goal
Attorney work-life balance is also something that can’t be defined just once. Rather, it will evolve and grow as your life changes. The important thing is that you’re intentional in documenting what this looks like for you. Then, use that self-discovery to chart a course of action that’s flexible, yet committed to your overall well-being and long-term mental health. Consistency is important here since the accumulation of small efforts on a daily basis can lead to big results.

Pro Bono Tips To Work Efficiently

- Pick a cause, organization or project that you feel passionate about. This can make pro bono work more enjoyable — and more rewarding.
- Use pro bono work as an opportunity to learn a new practice area. Find a field of law that is new and exciting so that you are learning new skills and challenging yourself in novel ways. There are plenty of resources and legal aid providers who can provide advice and support in this regard.
- Carefully evaluate the resources you can allocate to your pro bono case. Do not overwhelm yourself by taking on a client with a legal issue that takes more time and resources than you can give. This is especially true for smaller firms with fewer attorneys and limited budgets.
- Be clear about the expectations and scope of work. Make sure to outline your availability and scope of expertise with your client upfront. Have this conversation early so that everyone is on the same page as to where the client-attorney relationship lines are drawn.

Additional Resources

1. American Bar Association (ABA) Model Rule 6.1 establishes the professional responsibility standards for attorneys with respect to pro bono service.

2. The ABA maintains a Pro Bono Resource Directory, which helps connect attorneys with pro bono organizations near them, and Probono.net is a resource that connects lawyers and clients together.

3. The Legal Services Corporation also provides financial support for civil legal aid to low-income Americans.

Married to your work? Consider the cost

If you’re spending most of your time working, your work and your home life might be negatively affected. Consider the consequences of poor work-life balance:

Fatigue. When you’re tired, your ability to work productively and think clearly might suffer — which could take a toll on your professional reputation or lead to dangerous or costly mistakes.

Poor health. Stress can worsen symptoms related to many medical conditions and put you at risk of substance misuse.

Lost time with friends and loved ones. If you’re working too much, you might miss important family events or milestones. This can leave you feeling left out and might harm your relationships.
